

---

Libertarian Radio Shows

Posted by Whowcott - 2008/05/21 17:54

---

This thread discusses the Content article: Libertarian Radio Shows

This is a fantastic resource. I'm always looking for good talk radio. What is a Roka radio?

=====

Re:Libertarian Radio Shows

Posted by redgar - 2008/05/21 18:11

---

I couldn't be any happier with my Roku radios. See the link in the original article. Its a radio player that allows you to play internet radio stations without any computer being turned on (they index thousands of them). They can also stream mp3's from any computer (or networked storage device) that is on your local network. They make two types. One is an alarm clock similar to a Bose radio, the other has outputs to a stereo amplifier. I have one of each. They both work off the wireless wifi network I have at my house. You do need a broadband (cable, fios, dsl) connection to the internet and a wireless router (the stereo version can connect directly to a router as well). I'm sure there are other brands as well. Or you can just go the old fashioned way and listen to libertarian shows via a computer.

I don't own stock or benefit in any way from this endorsement (but probably should!).

I should also add that their website <http://radiatoroku.com> indexes radio stations. You don't need to buy one of their radios to use their indexing. You can create an account, search for stations and add them to your favorites and play your stations on your computer. If you find a station thats not in their index you can add it as well.

=====